ORIGIN AND NATURE OF THE SAB-SOUTH BUILD PART II.--- ELETORY. Chapter XII.-Continued.

The civil war, which soon grew out of these commotions, and which cost Charles the First his crown, and the head on which he wore it, was pressing lascivious mirth and levithe great means through which these ity, it is therefore ordained that. reformatory measures gained the ancendancy : and we need to look somewhat closely to this, lest we instead of which are recommended mintake the causes which led to the to the people of this land, the proattribute to pure religious zeal, what was but the necessary result of the politico-religious revolution of that

The spirit of liberty had found bome with the common people, and was demanding release from th civil and ecclesiastical usurpations and oppressions which marked the beginning of the reign of Charles the First. His Queen was an open friend of the Papists, while he claimed to be the supporter of the orthodox Church, as founded by Elizabeth. Laud and his co-workers were the King's advisors, and at the head of the Court or Church party. Against these were arrayed the whole Puritan party, and many others who could not followship the papistic tendency of the Court. In the Parliament, this included the body of the "House of Commona." and a party in the "House of Lords." But the "Bench of Bishops," who were ex officio members of the House of Lords, prevented, by their votes, all efforts at change or reform in the Church.

About 1640. the struggle openly commenced by the passage of a reformatory bill in the House of Commons, one provision of which was for a stricter observance of Sunday. It was defeated in the House of Lords; but the discussion and agitation did much to arouse the people, and to disturb the security of the throne and the church party. This would probably have ended for the time in discussion simply, but that, upon the heel of the failure of the bill, there came the terrible insurrection of the Papists, and massacre of the Protest ants in Ireland, on the 28d of October. 1642. Strong suspicions were entertained, which proved in a good degree correct, that the Court, and especially the Queen, who was ruler of the King, and hence of the kingdom, was privy to the plot, and fears were at once aroused, that a similar fate, awaited the English non-conformiete. The efforts of Parliament. and of the Irish Protestants, to obtain refief for the sufferers, and punishment for the offenders, at the hands of the Court, only widened the breach between the two parts of the government, and told of the complicity of the Court with the barbarous butchery of the Irish. This led to a rapid separation. The Bishops were soon driven from the House of Lords. The King fled to York, followed by his party. The Parliament having tried in vain to obtain his co-operation to avert the dangers to the kingdom, took the power into their own hands. The Queen went to Holland, from whence with her son-in-law, the Duke of Orange, she forwarded supplies and means to the King. Each party possessed itself of as much territory and military strength as possible, and the King, marching against London, was met at "Hidgehill near Keinton in Warwickshire." by the Parliament forces under the Earl of Essex, and the first battle took place on the 23d of October, 1648, just one year from the breaking out of the Irish insurrection.
