satisfactory reply made to his article. Mr. Hull's second paragraph, which is meant to be his strongest, is certainly perplexing to me. In it he seeks to reply to the fact set forth by L., that a particular day of the week is not set apart as holy time by the fourth commandment. On this he writes nearly fifty lines, quotes Scripture four times, and so satisfies himself that he concludes with the following: "From the above, where is the chance to doubt that the commandment meant the seventh day of the week?" Now, sir, I have read this paragraph over and over, and if the Elder it right, my head is not worth any thing; for, to my view, if there was ever a failure to make a point, Mr. Hull has totally failed to show that the commandment meant the seventh day of the week. He may have proved that the Sabbath took place on the seventh day after six days of labor, but nothing more. If the command is, as L. has expressed it. and as all sound criticism of language would interpret it, then Mr. Hull's whole system falls to the ground.

It is not a fact. that the seventh day of the first week of time was the day on which Jehovah rested. Mr. Hull knows that these were not days Genesis, but vast periods, beside which the time from then till now is imparting habbath School instruc- as nothing. Hundreds of vears of experiment have proved that Christian unity is not promoted by different denominations communing together; for no more harmony yet exists among such denominations than among such ad limit their communion by thei discipline. Open communion is, at best, but an apology for disunion, as it could not exist without.

The only consistent open communionists are those who insist upon. no test of conformity to the revealed Word, but throw open the door for all, irrespective of faith, practice, or even moral character. / For, the moment moral character is insisted upon, bars are put up, and a test established. And the moment they set up such a test, they yield the whole ground that the communion should be restricted. And if it should be restricted, then there must be some scriptural standard by which it should be done.

This brings us to the question, Where does the Lord's Supper belong-in the church, or out of it? If it belongs, in the church, then it does not belong outside. And if it belongs in the church, it belongs there on the same footing with any other ordinance of the church Hence it must be limited, because the church is limited. But if it does not belong to the church, then it is not an ordinance of the church, and therefore the church. as such. has nothing to do with it. It is, then, merely a public social feast, to which all have a right, and to be regulated and controlled, by public opinion. But if it is an institution of the church, then the church is wholly responsible for its beervance and the manner of it. If the Master has prescribed any conditions as requisites, the church is solemply bound to insist upon them. "As oft as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show forth the Lord's death, till he come.". This showing forth signifies a sacrament, and a secrement signifies regulations, and regulations signify limitations nd restrictions. All obligations and privileges that God has conferred upon men are upon specified conditions, which thus become commands; and disregarding them is re-

Nor did the Christians answer, "I am a Christian : I cannot omit it." Now, if you have any evidence, bring it forward. See Andrews' History of the Sabbath, chap. 14, page 217, &c. The testimony of Eusebius is not that any one kept the "Jewish Sabbath," as Mr. D. says; but in giving an account of the martyrdom of Agapius, A. D. 233, he bears testimony that the seventh day was then the Sabbath. Brother, I shall be quite satisfied if you will not misrepresent my statements. I pass over what Mr. D. says concerning my statements about Jus tin Martyr, with simply saying, that he does not deny any statement that I made, but tries to break their force by speaking lightly of them. What have copied from him is amply sufficient to show that he was an uncertain guide, and a visionary man.
