-Sunday-school Times.

So noble, so loving, so gentle and fair; Their warfare soon ended, their race swiftly run. They're released from a world of temptation and care.

They'reⁱsleeping in Jesus, no more to awake, Till the trumpet shall sound on that glad Easter-day, When all "who have died in the Lord" shall arise, To dwell with their Saviour, forever and aye

They're sleeping in Jesus-a blessed repose, Secure from all evil; then, why should w weep For those whom the Saviour folds in His arms,

For so He doth give His beloved ones sleep They're sleeping in Jesus; then let us rejoice, In hope of a blissful re-union above, In that city where sorrow nor sin e'er invade, But all shall be glad in the Holy One's love. They're sleeping in Jesus. Oh, then, let us strive To follow the path that our Saviour once trod:

If by inheritance or otherwise, he owns lands not adapted to the department of farming which his tastes, inclination, or judgment have led him to select, let him sell out, select and purchase another spot, adapted to his wants. The man is of more consequence than the farm. The farm is but to develop the man; and no young man should ever be subservient to position |or /locality-but rising above them, should use the material which nature has placed at his command for the greatest development of his manhood. By all means, start right, and the difficulty of securing headway afterward is a matter of no more anxiety than 'the growth of a healthy plant well set in soil and climate indigenous to its genus.

"As a merchant may be a good judge of groceries and know nothing of clothes, or a good financier may know nothing of manufacturing, so a farmer may raise splendid horses and know nothing of sheep; may be a most accessful shepherd and know nothing of cattle; may raise the best and purest of cereals and seeds, and be ignorant of cattle, horses and sheep. Let the young farmer decide with due deliberation upon the dethe partment of agricultural labor to which the genius, the skill, the talent and industry of his life shall be given. Who shall say, that with such deliberation in a decision, and such application afterward, he will not be eminent. If the labor of a well directed life is thus given to his calling, given in earnest. given with the spirit of enterprise and manhood, how can there be otherwise than great success-than rich rewardthan a comparative happiness-than the addition of an impetus to society by increased knowledge and wealth.'
