Before retiring to bed, most especially in fre time of year, hold both feet before a blazing fire, stockings removed, for ten minutes at least, rubbing them with the hands all the time until they feel perfectly dry and warm ; such a process will warm the feet more effectually in five minntes than can be done in an hour by holding them to the fire with stockings and shoes on.

Sometimes, without apparent cause, a person will suddenly wake up to the knowledge that his feet are cold, and a disagreeable sensation is caused, which pervades the whole body, and the mind and temper be-come fretful and morpes; this is often the case in the very midst of summer: when this is observed, you are year.-New England Farmer. taking cold, and you should instantly treat the feet to a blazing fire as named above ; if this is not practicable. give them a hot foot bath as just directed; in either case, you will not only avert the cold, but you will experience a feeling of comfortableness which is absolutely delightful; this same kind of bath is the speediest and most comfortable means of warming the feet when they are found to be uncomfortably cold after doming in from a walk, or a long day's work.

Many ways have been advised for rendering the upper leather of shoes impervious to water: a much better plan is to keep out of the water, for whatever will keep the water out, will also keep the perspiration and ill odor, always in. Some persons' feet are smelled a mile off, more .or less. To make leather impervious is to make it board-like, hard, un1.1
