> LIFE BEYOND DEATH, BY ALICE CARY.

The winds they sigh, and the birds they cry, And winter reigns in kire withered bowers; But after the weary dreary hours, With patterings sweet of ther silver feet. The spring comes trailing wreaths of flowers That shine like rainbows through the showers.

The birds they fly, and the leaves they die, And trift in dull heaps down the valleys, But after the weary, dreary days, The winds they beat the snow and the sleet To leaves of roses and leaves of lilies, And the fire of the wild pinks breaks to a blaze. blaze.

We sigh, alas! for the flowers of the grass, And the dalay'reft of the dew so tender, But after the dreary, weary weeks, The dove is seen, and the bough grows green, And the hills are sunned with sudden splendor, And the water findeth a voice and speaks.

And we, too, pass, like the flower of the grass And we, too, pass, like the hower of the grass, From spring to winter, and frost so hoary, And thence into silence low and dim, And we shall awake, for His great love's sake Who hath gone before us to live in glory, For he hath promised us life with him.

We have the best workers in every department that are available-workers whose expertness would be alone sufficient to secure for Waltham its high position. Among other tributary causes, may be stated the readiness with which each succeeding invention and improvement has been tested, and if approved, adopted. We are always ready to examine whatever experience, or art, or skill, may suggest, but we adopt nothing until experiments have demonstrated its excellence. In pursuance of this rule, we have brought to our aid all the mechanical improvements and valuable inventions of the last fifteen years, whether home or foreign in their origin. We have thus acquired the exclusive possession of the best and most valuable improvements now known in connection with watch-making, and secured for the Waltham factory a force and completeness not shared by any similar establishments in the world.
