FIRST RIDE IN THE CARS.

The Midland Railroad has penetrated a section of country where the locomotive is still a novelty to the old settlers. Not long ago, an old inhabitant of one of the secluded vales through which the Midland winds its course, clad in homespun, with his noonday lunch depos ited in one of his capacious pockets. got aboard a train at one of the small stations. The air of innocent wonderment with which he surveyed the interior of the car, before venturing to arrange himself in a seat, indicated that an excursion by rail was an event in his experience. Presently "toot, toot," sounded the signal to be off, and the train gradually gathered its way again. The venerable countryman exhibited evident signs of uneasiness as the speed increased, glancing from one end of the car to the other, up to the roof, and then out of the window, at the same time drawing himself nervously to the in-side extremity of the seat. Finally, the door at the forward end of the car opened to admit the conductor on his round after the way fare. The sudden clatter of the wheels over the iron rails that reached the ears of the astonished traveler, completely overcame his elf-possession. Springing from the seat, he grasped the conductor by both arms, and with an dared come near his charge. imploring expression and agonized tone, that sounded above the din, exclaimed : "For Heaven's sake, Captain, whoa up | and stop the wagon; I guess I will get out and walk over to 'Squire Johnson's; it's shorter crosslots." The conductor pacified the terrified passenger with kindly assurances, declining to receive double or treble fare, which was generously tendered, until the train reached the next station, when the old gentleman went over one side of the latform as soon as the cars had come to a stand, with an alacrity that was arprising in one of his years. When safely landed again on terra firma, he took a glance from the rear of the train to the locomotive, and drew a long breath, and remarked, that riding didn't agree with him much, tence he should most probably can be used to their inamoratas, but in
