

O, a wonderful stream is the river of Time,
As it flows through the realm of tears.

PUBLISHED BY GEORGE B. UTTER.

VOLUME XXVII.—NO. 3.

"THE SEVENTH DAY IS THE SABBATH OF THE LORD THY GOD."

WESTERLY, R. L. FIFTH-DAY, JANUARY 12, 1871.

TERMS—$2 50 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE.

WHOLE NO. 1355.

ADVERTISEMENTS.
WANTED ($25 A MONTH)
AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE

THE HISTORY OF THE GUYS CURIOUS
A new and interesting work

WELL'S CARBOLIC TABLETS
A new and powerful medicine for all kinds of ailments

WANTED—BUSINESS
SOLICITOR
No competition

WANTED FOR THE
LIBRARY OF FORT AND SONG
A new and interesting work

WANTED FOR THE
LIBRARY OF FORT AND SONG
A new and interesting work

WANTED FOR THE
LIBRARY OF FORT AND SONG
A new and interesting work

WANTED FOR THE
LIBRARY OF FORT AND SONG
A new and interesting work

to treat the people kindly and considerately,
and obeyed orders with the same punctiliousness

SENTENCED AND SHOT.
BY R. S. SHEPARD.
(Chas. S. Beckwood, of Milton College.)

When the war closed, I was "in at the death," otherwise I should not have this story to tell.

Life became very dear when you have fought your way from Hull to Alexandria, Virginia, in 1861, and at like being shot by your friends

Among the regiments ordered to report to the General, there was the 11th Cavalry

THE GREAT CENTRAL ROUTE TO THE WEST.
THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD, THROUGH CANADA, TO DETROIT.

THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD, THROUGH CANADA, TO DETROIT.

THE GREAT WESTERN RAILROAD, THROUGH CANADA, TO DETROIT.

The days of respite passed rapidly, and the anxiety and sympathy for the doomed man constantly increased in a pamulative ratio.

There was a crashing blast—a cloud of smoke—a loud, heavy thud, as the soldier fell back dead in his coffin, and the Sergeant fell limp and motionless into the arms of the Marshal, who stooped down upon him

It is dangerous to trifle with truth, to be careless about it, to hold it slight, to say "error may seem safe and fair—but depend upon it, the end thereof is death."

WHAT I KNOW OF FARMING.
BY HORACE GREELLY.
AGRICULTURAL EXPERIENCES.

As the people compose much the largest and best part of these shows, the reform must begin with them.

BEHIND THE ROSES.
Didst thou die in the west country,
Midst bowers that slope to the sunny sea?

AN INCIDENT AND ITS LESSONS.
It so happens that from the depot in Boston from which the cars leave for my home in a suburban town, the New York express comes from the city

SONNES IN ELISHA'S LIFE.
It is a quiet series of pictures we have before us, but all having one grand motto, "Have faith in God."

There are some kinds of work that boys can do as well as men, but no body claims that because a hobnob, in a mill, can do as much and as well as a man at his particular work, he should not have a share of man's wages, or even a woman's.

TWO GIRLS.
All alone in the old grand room,
Midst a certain wistful gloom,
A girl in her beauty bright,
The soft light of the chandeliers,

SEX AND WAGES.
The Christian Union contains, in a brief article on this subject, the following words: "We feel intuitively that when a woman does a man's work she should have the same pay."

THE TEN YEARS.
"Just seventy-to-day, sir!" said a handsome old gentleman, as he proudly drew himself up, "and as you are a man of letters, you are a few men of my age can say that."

THE LOWER CHRISTIAN LIFE.—"The higher Christian life is a favorite theme with some people—it is atmosphere in which they like to exist and meditate in our part of the world."

GOOD MANNERS.—Speaking at a recent meeting, Dr. Guthrie said: "Ask a person in Rome to show you the road, and he will give you a hundred answers; but ask any person a question for that purpose in his country, (Scotland) and he will say, 'Follow your nose, and you will find it.'"

GOLDEN WORDS FOR THE YOUNG.—"It is safer for me to abstain than to eat meat, and I will abstain from it. If I should indulge in drink, I will not stop at the man's drink which may make me temperate, but should become a slave to the habit, and with others of stronger nerve and firmer purpose go down to a drunkard's grave."

THE MONK IN SOLITUDE.—I recollect a man in Rome, told by a priest minister, about a monk of former days. He resolved to leave his monastery, on the ground that there were too frequently met with causes of provocation, and his wife was too frequently met with causes of provocation, and his wife was too frequently met with causes of provocation.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

There was a murmur of grateful applause along the whole line. The General had not intended, and yet he had punished the Sergeant severely, and yet been merciful to them both; and he had spared the life of one, thought sentenced, and kept a knowledge of it from the other, thereby making a bond of sympathy.

