AFTER THE EXOURSION

BY ALICE ROBBINS. O, mother, we've had such a happy time I couldn't begin to tell-There were hundreds and hundreds got aboard

By the time they rang the bell. The water sparkled like jewel-stones, White sails shone all around; I felt so happy I couldn't speak When the mighty boat swung round, And the flags blew out, and the boys hurrahed, And the band began to play, And the winds that came from the far wide sea Seemed to sweep our cares away.

We just forgot we were poor and patched And Madalen never smiled, But the light that shone in her happy eyes Made her look like another child. And little Bessy with folded hands And a face as white as snow, It was better to see her quiet joy

Than the finest, rarest show. And the music, Mother !-- the merry tune: As we floated away, away; I thought we were going straight to heav en, To spend one summer day.

And when we landed there wore trees Far as the eve could reach : And swings in the grove, and merry games, And a welcome word for each

I'll never forget it, mother, never ; I'll see it in my dreams-Those pretty flowers, those wildwood paths

And the purling, silvery streams. And kind hands gave us plenty of cake,

And red ripe apples and plums, And bread and butter as sweet as nuts-We never get in the slums.

Õ, mother, what good, great hearts they To give us such sweet delight! I'm sure the dear Lord will bless t

I'll pray him to, each night. And I'll never say in my soul again, When I pass their homes so fair; They have got all their hearts can wis For the poor they never care.'

And, mother, some time, oh ! some bless time.

Perhaps, when a woman grown, I'll take you out of this wretched life. Away from these alleys of stone. And I'll build you a tiny cottage, Where the sward is soft and green If I ever could live in the country, I'd b As happy as any queen. Out of this terrible squalor and dirt.
