CONVENIENCE THE STRONGEST ARGUMENT

In a conversation held recently with a gentleman of experience and intelligence on the Sabbath question, who, after going over the whole field of argument for Sunday, said the strongest argument he had ever found in its favor was that it was more convenient to keep it than to keep the day named in the Sabbath commandment.

We believe that the real obstacle in the way of Sabbath reform is the worldliness and weakness of faith on the part of Christians themselves. To attempt this reform upon any other than Scripture grounds is an offense against the Lord of the Sabbath, a mockery which he will not abide.

Dear reader, will you honestly, as in God's presence, answer the above question? We would not go beyond and say what we ought not, but we deeply feel the importance of this matter, and pray that it may come home to every heart.

I think it would be a boon to many if ministers of all denominations could be induced to hold services in their various places of worship on Friday evenings and Saturday mornings. The same as on Sunday. Perhaps many ministers would be unwilling to incur the trouble and expense of doing this on their own account, but they might be willing to give the use of their churches if voluntary ministers could be found to officiate.
