first. Suppose the prospect is a flattering one, and full of inducements promising comfort, affluence, and glory...

Moses not only turned his back upon the wealth and comfort that a prosperous nation offered...

The Egyptians supposed their kings to be divine. This is shown beyond a doubt in ancient history.

It was in Egypt—the birth-place of history, the cradle of Grecian culture, and first settled abode of a wandering Hebrew people...

Finally, I am reminded by this text that what might seem to be a loss, may prove the greatest gain when the end is reached.

Not so with Israel. Theirs was a prospect unpromising in everything except toil and hopeless bondage.

Such men never die, and can never be forgotten. Their light never fades. The world searches her battle fields for noble men...

ideals of heroic men in the humbler walks of life, where the struggle is fierce between the soul and sin...

The same conflict through which Moses passed in choosing afflictions rather than the pleasures of sin prevails in a greater or lesser degree to day.

But glancing again at the text, we are reminded that the "pleasures" and profits of sin are only for a season.
