BY MRS. M. E. H. EVERETT.

Where I go I do but follow One whose feet before me trod, From this dark and rarrow chasm He ascended unto God. He for whom the blessed angels Ince unsealed the door of stone. High above a: I worlds exalted. Never will forsake his own.

From earth's many toils and sorrows, I have gone away to rest: In the home of the Beloved Shall I be a welcome guest; In the house of many mansions, I shall doubtless find a place With the souls of those delivered To behold their Saviour's face.

If in heaven mine eyes are lifted. Think how glorious heaven must bet Though my feet descend to hades. In the shade he walks with me! Friends, farewell! I only follow One who came to be my guide; Think how safe to trust his leading, When you miss me from your side!

The following is a general description of Daytona and of the East coast, as to soil topography, and products. The strip between the ocean and the rivers generally called the peninsula is made up of sandy ridges, with occasional banks and mounds of disintegrated shell, covered with hard wood trees; low rich spots of loam next to the river. Mainland, shell hammock, ten to twenty feet above the river; back of this narrow strips of low rich land, then a ridge fifteen to twenty-five feet high, with sandy soil, heavily covered with hard wood trees. West of this, low pine lands, level, with dark surface soil underlaid in many places with hardpan. Back of these so-called "pine islands" an extensive hammock, very rich virgin loam, underlaid with marl and clay, from seven to eleven feet above river level, covered with a heavy growth of oak, hickory, gum, maple, cabbage, palmetto, etc., and containing many wild orange groves. This extends the whole length of the coast from one to three miles in width. The soil of this body of land is as rich as any in the anything adapted to the climate. This region is backed by a high ridge with sandy soil and subsoil of disintegrated yellew coquina -a composite stone in which shells are the main element—covered with oak, hickory, spruce and yellow pine, etc. This rises to such an elevation, forty-five to sixty five feet, as to make it pleasant and healthy. Then comes the "flatwoods"—level open pine woods with saw grass and muck ponds, grassy savannas and cypress swamps. > WASHINGTON LETTER. (From our Regular Correspondent.) Washington, May, 2nd 1885.

The President at Church has always been an interesting spectacle to sight seers in Washington and also to residents of the city. On Sunday mornings large crowds flock to the Presbyterian church on Fourand a half street, which is now called the President's church, in order to catch a glimpse of the Presidential party. About five minutes before the service begins the President's carriage draws up in front of the church. A crowd gathers around it, so intent on seeing Mr. Cleveland and the la-United States and is capable of producing dies accompanying him that it blocks their way and two policemen who are on duty for this purpose have to make a passage way to the church door. Probably one third of the people in the church are strangers in the city, another third are regular attendants and the rest residents of the city who go to the church are because it is the President's church. These people attended the Metropolitan church when General Grant worshiped there. They followed Mr. Hayes to the Foundry church, which is also a Methodist church. From there they found their way to the little Disciples church which President Garfield attended. They came to this church in such numbers that a larger one had to be erected to hold them. Some, but not many changed their place of worship to St. Johns church, where President Arthur was a regular atetc., with others of less size, and palmetto in | tendant, but that church was so small that profusion. Yellow pine very valuable for it could not hold many. There was wellumber, and spruce pine upon the ridges and come, however, for so many as could get in, and as a rule the pews were all packed half

> People in large numbers, especially office holding classes, are now remembering that after all they were wrong heretofore, and that it is to a Presbyterian church that they originially belonged. The revenue of Dr. Sunderland's church will be considerably increased by this sudden religious revival.

When the service is over the crowd rushes and pushes in every direction, blocks up the exists, or lingers in the aisles staring, while the Presidential party wends its way back to the carriage. GRANT AS A SOLDIER.

From an anecdotal and reminiscent article by General Adam Badeau, on the characteristics of Grant as a soldier, in the May Century Magazine we quote the following: "At the close of the war, the man who had led the victorious armies was not forty-three years of age. He had not changed in any essential qualities from the captain in Mexico or the merchant in Galena. The daring and resource that he showed at Donelson and Vicksburg had been foreshadowed at Panama and Garita San Cosme; the persistency before Richmond was the development of the same trait which led nim to seek subsistence in various occupations, and follow fortune through many unsuccessful years. Developed by experience, taught by circumstance, learning from all he saw and even more from what he did, as few have ever been developed or taught, or have learned, he, nevertheless, maintained the self-same personality through it all. The characteristics of the man were exactly those he manifested as a soldier—directness and steadiness of purpose, clearness and certainty of judgment, self-reliance and immutable determination.

"Grant's genius, too, was always ready; it was always brightest in an emergency. The following extract from an article on All his faculties were sharpened in battle; | "Particular Prejudices" will be found helpthe man who to some seemed dull, or even ful to all those who are willing to accept Let him consider how many of the causes of slow, was then prompt and decided. "It was undoubtedly as a fighter rather than a manœuvrer that Grant distinguished himself. He was ready with resource and prompt in decision at Belmont and Donelson, but it was the invincible determination at both these places as well as at Shiloh that won. As with men, so with armies and generals: skill and strength are tremendous advantages, but courage outweighs them all. . . . In battle, as in strategical movements. Grant always meant to take the initiative: he always advanced, was always the aggressor, always sought to force his plans upon the enemy; and if by any chance or circumstance the enemy attacked, his method of defense was an attack elsewhere. At Donelson, as we have seen, when his troops were pushed back on the right he assaulted on the left; and this was only one instance out of a hundred. This, too, not only because he was the invader, or because his forces were numerically stronger, but because it was his nature in war to assail. In the Vicksburg campaign his army was smaller than Pemberton's; yet he was the aggressor. In the operations about Iuka his position was a defensive one, but he attacked the enemy all the same. It was his idea of war to attack incessantly and advance invariably, and thus to make the operations of the enemy a part and parcel of his own.

THE CRY OF THE PERISHING.

The No Church is the largest on earth

It numbers three-fourths of the human race. It is marching on, while I write, thousand millions strong. A thousand millions! Imagination staggers under such a figure. Suppose this unspeakable army were to file before you at the rate of one a minute; it would be 5884 A. D. when the last man drew up, walking twelve hours a day; in a year, a quarter of a million, and in forty years, ten millions would have passed you, leaving 990 millions yet to come. You would have to stand on that spot 3,960 years to see the rear of that prodigious host. All these are now living, and in a few years will be dead, having never heard so much as there was a Jesus. This, after eighteen centuries of the Cross! Each of these is a human being, I suppose? Yes. According to your creed, damned at death? Yes. Are you a Christian? Yes. And not giving even a passing thought to those poor, fate crushed pilgrims. Christless and weary, trudg ng out into the great night? What! grudged the coin to your mission collector; spent all on your own, dear, precious, darling self; God help you, brother. You shall awake yet, like Jonah, and go down to God's school in the belly of hell, to learn by misery what mercy means. Oh, sleek, comfortable, well-bolstered Christians, go weep and howl. Your gold and silver are rusted, and the rust of it shall eat your flesh as fire. Ye soft-cushioned, self-loving, select souls, your purgatory comes. In heaven's name fling off your lethargy, and hear the cry of the perishing! In the name of this Niagara of humanity, pluging over to the abyss. awake! We are our brother's keeper, or his killer .-G. G. McLeod.

EFECTIVE FAMILY RELIGION.

Family religion requires the highest mutual confidence. The reading of the Bible, prayer in the morning or evening, attendance at church, cannot constitute family religion. The spirit of the parents must be devont; the children must know that both father and mother depend upon God for direction, and look to him for comfort. The accidential discovery of a parent at prayer makes a deeper impression upon a child's mind than a month of routine services. The spirit in which religious subjects are referred to is more than the things that are said. The undertone is more important than the overtone. Not gloom, nor tasks, nor morbid conscientiousness, but simple, unaffected confidence in God and truth, a personal trust in Christ, and a love for each other which is the result of the love of all for Christ, and a sincere spirit of good will at home, and of kindness in thought and expression to all who enter the home or are mentioned there, these make the family region, and make its Bible-reading, prayer and church-going as natural as its social life. No child ever goes out from such a family to become an unbeliever or a scoffer. But from the pharisaic, the stiff, the dead, the intolerant, whose religion is a yoke of forms without heart, few of the youth become reigious.—Southern Presbyterian.

THE HABIT OF MURMURING.

The murmuring of a brook is a very pleasant sound, but the murmuring of a mortal is not pleasant to the ear of man, or of God. Murmuring is the expression of discontentcomplaining. Strange as it may seem, the adopted sons and daughters of God are sometimes guilty of murmuring. Hence the command. "Do all things without murmuring." Pleasant duties will of course, be done without complaining, but painful, self-denying duties are apt to occasion mumuring. Sometimes feelings akin to those of Jonah lead men to think they do well to murmurthat they are justified in complaining. But the command is: "Do all things," however difficult and unpleasant, "without murmur-

All duties are assigned by God. Each one has his appointed place. The place is assigned him by infinite love, guided by infinite wisdom. If a man gets out of his appointed place, and engages in another than his appointed work, he may have cause of discontent, but he can not complain of God. He may well murmur, but not against God.

The precept has reference to murmuning against God. A Christian finds himself in a condition inferior to that of many of his brethren. He dwells on the advantages they possess-their numerous material comforts, their apparent freedom from care, their pleasant and unobstructed paths of duty. He has failed to learn Paul's lesson of contentment; he has forgotten that God We find much in the writings of Hannah has made the differences which exist. - He secretly, or perhaps openly, repines at his lot. In 1837 the Missionary Society met at Berlin, N. Y., and Joel Greene preached the opening sermon from Matt. 22:39. W. B. Maxson was elected President, H. H. the Executive Committee, monthly, that extracts might be made for publication in the Protestant Sentinel. Ministers were requested to preach on the subject of missions as often as practicable.

Reports of missionaries were read, and the Executive Committee was requested to prepare extracts for publication in the Sentinel.

It was recommended that the evening after the first Sabbath in each month be employed as a season of praver for missions and the spread of the gospel throughout the world; and the General Conference was requested importance.

The following work was planned for the coming year:

Preaching at Hebron, Pa., and vicinity by Allegany ministers; one month's labor in Mexico, N. Y., and vicinity, four months in Hayfield, Pa.; Western Reserve, Ohio, and Michigan and Indiana; six months in Virginia and Western Pennsylvania, "If practi cable;" six weeks in Susquehanna county, Pa., and vicinity; six weeks each in Clarence and Persia, N. Y., and vicinities; and the idea of making an effort to send the gospel to the Jews in foreign lands was favorably received and referred to the Executive Committee.

It was voted that no missionary be allowed compensation for time or expenses in attending the Annual Meeting of the Society and Conference; but the expenses on the mission field were to include board, keeping and shoeing horse, and ordinary carriage repairs.

Missionary work was reported by the following brethren: Joel Greene, Alex Campbell, E. S. Bailey, Stillman Coon, N. V. Hull, David Clawson, and H. H. Baker as canvassing agent. The work amounted in the aggregate to 27 months, 25 days; total compensation, $549 73; expenses, $100 82; receipts reported $196 39.

The Conference Committee on the State of Religion this year mentioned as one sign of a low condition of religion among some of the churches, their meager support of the benevolent operations of the denomination. In 1838 the Society met at Piscataway,

N. J., the Introductory Discourse being preached by H. H. Baker from Acts 16: 17. A special committee recommended the organization of a Hebrew Missionary Society for the spread of the gospel among the Jews, and suggested a plan of organization; and the report was adopted.

PROTESTANT MISSIONS IN INDIA.

Paper read at a Missionary Meeting in Syracuse, N Y

BY SARA MAXSON.

It has been the custom of most persons whom I have heard speak on the subject of missions in India, to preface their remarks with some statements as to the extent and populousness of the country, and though so story, I find myself each time soliloquizing, Missionaries were requested to report to "Well, I really had not thought that the people, and more and more the Hindus country was so large, or that it contained so many people." Of course we know that Europe is inhabited by many nations, and that they differ widely in religion, manners, and customs, but are we not accustomed to think that when the Creator of the universe was ready to make the Indians, he selected from his collection of patterns the one labelled, "Insignificant Barbarians," cut them out one and all after the same pattern, and marked the country to correspond? Not knowing how many have been laboring under this common delusion, I will commence to repeat the recommendation and urge its | in the orthodox manner by saying that numerous and diverse as the nationalities and races of Europe are, those of India exceed them both in number and diversity, that the Indians form nearly a sixth of the world's population, are united into more than two hundred tribes and states, and have a hundred and twenty-three distinct languages and dialects. Their religions are so numerous as to show almost every grade between one god and an infinite number, while in their capacity to receive, and ability to impart knowledge, there is as great diversity.

> The Danes had held Tanquebar for well on toward a hundred years before it seems to have occurred to them that it might possibly be their duty to give Christian instruction to the Indians under their rule, and it was not till 1705 that missionaries were sent. Tardy as this may seem, a number of years elapsed before the English woke up to the same conviction, and to Denmark belongs the honor of beginning the Christianization

> The Danish king ever felt the menest interest in the mission, and was never too busy to attend to its affairs. Let us look into his camp in Pomerania at the siege of Stralsund. This evening the soldiers are gathering in knots near the king's private abode, which they watch with eager eye, as if expecting some one. Their talk is all of a stranger whom it is said the king has received with marks of the greatest respect, and with whom he has been in close converse for hours. Bye and bye, he comes forth, not a richly dressed prince, with humble attendants, as they had imagined, only a clergyman, whose "commanding presence, wonderful dignity and fire, keen eye, bronzed face seamed with deep lines of care, and winning courtesy," scarcely appeased their disappointed expectation of grandeur. Afterward, when they heard him preach, and knew that he was Ziegenbalg, their own missionary sent to Tanquebar nine years before, and now home for a short time, they did not wonder when some days, even, "were snatched from the work of war," that the king might hear all about and suitably arrange for this work of peace.

Although, as we are aware, the Indian Missionary work had been performed by possessions of Denmark were but small, in -twenty or thirty years-the influence of their mission was felt as far as Bombay, the northern tribes, and Ceylon, books published by the mission finding their way to all of one of the cities in the Bombay Presidency, put forth great efforts for the good of this of missionary work not only there, but at country, and thus, though so humbly, were other places. to the cause; steadily enlarging purposes and) had learned enough of the language to make themselves understood; they commenced preaching to the natives, and soon after began a translation of the Bible, as well as to write tracts. Soon a school was established, which, in 1816, had 300 pupils. In the same year, a press was set up, and later a School Book and School Society was formed, which, as its name indicates, was devoted to the promotion of education. The Bombay Bible Society was of great use in distributing Bibles all along the Malabar coast, as well as in Bombay.

Notwithstanding the perseverance with which the missionaries worked, it seemed to many lookers on that it was to little purpose, as almost no converts were made, but often heard, instead of becoming an old the end was not yet. Little by little, a strong impression was being made on the were becoming convinced that their religion and Christianity could not live together. The crash came in 1839, when two Parsee young men of education and talent were baptized. "They were supposed to be the first proselytes from the religion of Zoroaster in modern times. Their Parsee friends became much enraged, and would have laid violent hands on them, but they had taken refuge with the missionaries. A legal process was instituted against the missionaries, but in vain. They then attempted to break up the schools by threats against the parents, and succeeded to some extent. They published a tract in defense of Hinduism, and petitioned the Government for protection against the influence of the missionaries, but all with little effect except to show that the progress of the gospel had begun to disturb the native conscience, and awaken fears for the safety of idolatry."

In Newcombe's Cyclopædia of Missions, we find that about this time the Hindus began an unprecedented work. None of their popular religious books had ever been in print, but now thousands of dollars were spent in printing and circulating them. There were about a dozen native newspapers and magazines published in and about Bombay, and these united, one and all, against the new religion. In refutation of the teachings of the missionaries, they brought before the people, not only all that heathen learning could furnish, but extracts from Paine, Voltaire, and other infidels. Meanwhile, the Christian press was not idle. In seven languages it successfully met the idolwe can be saved, but the name of Jesus."

ceptation of Christianity was removed.

Comparing recent with former statistics, we find that the native Christian population of Bombay is increasing in a much greater ratio than formerly. In 1881, it numbered about a thousand souls. At that time, there were in Bombay forty-two mission schools, educating 2,796 pupils.

They begged them to stay longer, and it was with grief that after a three days' stay, they were obliged to see them depart.

Now, however, there is a steadily fort; his visit to Farmington; and sugges. increasing wish among the numerous well educated gentlemen of Bombay, that their wives and daughters may become their companions in knowledge.

From the statistical tables for 1881, we find in India 586 foreign missionaries, 72 foreign lay helpers, 461 native lay helpers. 2.488 native preachers and catechists, 98 foreign male and 479 foreign female teachers, 3,481 native Christian male and 1,643 native Christian female teachers; these being the agents of 47 societies and seven isolated or independent missions.

A writer on the work in India, comment ing on these statistics, says: ".These numbers may seem large, but in reality they give only one foreign Christian agent to 210,000 of the population, and one native Christian preacher to each 83,000. Thus the laborers are few, so few, indeed, that numerous districts as large as English counties, have no Christian instruction of any kind, and probably more than half the population of the entire empire, have never once definitely heard the gospel of salvation."

The same author continues: "The work, then, of India's conversion to Christianity is being fairly accomplished. But it is a stupendous undertaking; how should it be regarded? The Church of Christ has never realized what is required of her for the overthrow of the most ancient, populous, compact, and demoralizing system of beathenism the world has ever seen, and the conversion of more Mohammedans than are found in any other three empires or states. Missionary societies should feel bound to give a large proportion of their resources and of the best men to India. Missionaries should be profoundly impressed by the conviction that to take any part in the overthrow of such stupendous forms of supertition, and in the winning such a magnificent empire for Christ, is a supreme honor, as honors are truly estimated in the sight of

PLEASANT HARDSHIPS.

Before I entered the ministry a preacher old me that a preacher's life was a hard one; but although I have been preaching for more than eight years, I never found the life & hard one till within the past twelve months. During these eight years, I have many a time walked from twenty to thirty miles, and preached three times on the Sabbath, and then walked from ten to fifteen miles & day through the week, preaching every even-ing, but I never looked upon it as being hard; it was too pleasant to be hard. I had plenty to eat and drink, good clothing to wear, sound health, and the love of God shed abroad in my heart; so the work was pleasant. But within the past twelve months I have found it very hard. Not because my love has grown cold; that is as warm and intense as ever. It is because I have, with my family, to "live hard" very often; not being able to get our money from the people when it is due. A preacher has no right to beg for his bread, but I had to do it, a few weeks back, or go without. There was nothing in the pantry, and not a cent in the pocket to buy anything. I was greatly troubled, not knowing what to do. Presently a member of the church came in, and I was obliged to lay my case before him. He very kindly took up the matter, which resulted in a good "pound social." How pleased we were, and thankful to God! Soon, however, the "pounds" were eaten up, and darkness was growing upon us once more. Thanks be to God, the light intercepted it, for your draft for $100 came just in time. Now it seems to me that this ought not to be any part of a missionary's experience. I know of several cases similar to my own in this State. I hope

Sabbath Reform.

Remember the Sabbath-day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God."

FIRING ALL ALONG THE LINE.

BY A. H. LEWIS, D D.

Every great battle for reform must be preceded by much preliminary skirmishing. The firing on the picket lines of Sabbath Reform is steadily increasing. From a comparatively small list of exchanges, we collate the following items of agitation. which have found their way into print, and have come under our observation within a few weeks past. These items do not include book notices of Sabbath literature. We ask the readers of the RE-CORDER to scan the following facts, and to recognize in them the call of God to more active efforts in spreading the whole truth concerning the Sabbath. It is the only hope in these years of evil and error.

Baptist circles in the State of Indiana are thoroughly aroused upon the Sabbath question. The conversion of Bro. U. M. McGuire, of Crothersville. and his wise and manly course, has been no small factor in this agitation. He has refused a call to the pastorate of a Seventh-day Baptist Church in the State of New York, preferring to remain in his home to preach Christ and his Sabbath.

Rev. C. E. W. Dobbs, D. D., of Madison, Ind., a prominent Baptist, has been pursuing the question in a series of six papers, in the Indiana Baptist, published at Indianapolis. The Doctor has taken the cogency of the arguments, which compel consistent Baptists to return to the Sabbath. Rather than do this, Dr. Dobbs rushes onto the sands of Sunday as a new and distinct institution, wholly independent of the fourth commandment. The following extracts from the opening paper will show

"When I penned, at the editor's request, that article on the 'Change of the Day,' I was quite sure my positions would not meet with universal acceptance; for, as I said then, 'I know it is very difficult to get an unprejudiced hearing to any departure from commonly accepted opinion.' See especially Jol. 2: 14-17, 2 Cor. 3: 7. Some may shrink from this proposition, and ask why the fourth commandment is singled out as peculiarly Judaic and temporary. Are not the ten commandments the law for the race and for all time? I answer very decidedly, no. the other mentioned ordinances are the perpetual ob- which must be done before the temperance reformaservance of the Passover and circumcision. The same argument that proves the Lord's day is the "Christian Sabbath" will justify the Pedobaptist in his mistaken perversion of the nature of baptism and the Supper. The Holy Spirit never calls the first day of the week the Sabbath. Wherever that word is found in the New Testament it is the name of the Jewish institution and refers to the seventh day-Saturday. We ought not to be wiser than the inspired Scriptures. Neither should we tremblingly fear to accept plain and unmistakable gospel facts as recorded by the sacred historians of the Apostles' acts and utterances. Let us not hesitate to call Bible things by Bible names.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

The reformatory spirit which pervades the hearts of those who plan the work for the W. C. T. U. has carried them to an open espousal of Sabbath Reform as a part of their work. So far as this involves the execution of the liquor laws on Sunday, it is a legitimate work, not however, as a matter of Sabbath Reform, but as an important feature of temperance reform. As a day of leisure for the masses, Sunday is the Devil's day for the rum traffic. As such, the civil law ought to close every shop, but not on the false ground that Sunday is the Sabbath. And all efforts to check the stream of rum on the one day when its flow is most demanded, will prove abortive while the flow is permitted and protected on all other days. But as an element of agitation the movement on the part of the W, C. T. U. prom ises to be a prominent factor. The following ex tracts show the lines of work proposed:

"Mrs. J. C. Bateman, who, at the St. Louis Convention, was appointed superintendent of this newly created department of the W. C. T. U. work, has issued a leastet addressed to the members of the Unions, in which she says:

"' Dear Sisters,-In undertaking, and asking you ground wholly un-Baptistic, being forced thereto by to undertake, this new department of our work, am well nigh appalled at its magnitude, and still more impressed with its importance.

'As Christian patriots, we must remember th words of the prophet Isaiah: "The nation and king absolute no-Sabbathism, and attempts to build the dom that will not serve thee shall perish." W know that to serve is to obey, and that the fourth commandment is as obligatory as the sixth.

"'We have at the outset this strong ground of encouragement, that our Nation was founded by Godhow thoroughly the question is being agitated on | fearing men, and that the Sabbath is recognized and protected by our laws; and though in the lapse of years we have as a nation carelessly drifted far away from the precepts of God and the practice of our fathers, the law remains still a strong bulwark. "'The object of law is to protect our rights, and this the common law does by requiring that only

Sabbath. "'We all know how this provision has been stretched to cover whatever the selfishness of man desired. The public conscience, by which we mean the majority of individual consciences, has become demoralized, public and private business and recreation are more and more allowed to encroach upon the Sabbath, and if this secularization of the day continues to increase, the law will become a dead letter, the Sabbath a national holiday, and then a

".' With greedy eyes the unprincipled liquor seller any restraint, he cannot consent to sit idly with own example and influence consistent.' the Saturday night's wages are lying untouched in the pocket. He must break down our Sabbath.

"Having paid a license for six days, he steals the seventh, using it secretly if he must, openly if he dares, until to day, in portions of our large cities, scarcely a vestige of the Sabbath remains. Open bars defy the law, and disorder and demoralization most fearful result. And to a smaller degree the same is true wherever liquor is sold.

"'Statistics show that on this day protected by law, the sales of liquor are two and one fifth times the average for the other six days, and the mischief wrought is greater in the same proportion.

of evil. One of our best informed temperance women tells me that in her city the servant girls by hundreds and perhaps thousands are escorted (often by married men) to the beer gardens and attendant free concerts in the suburbs, to return in the night or the next day with virtue gone, sobriety gone, and unfitted for their work. The same is to my knowledge true elsewhere.

There is too lenient a feeling toward these resorts as a harmless concession to our foreign citizens, while they are in fact but the open gateways of hell for our young women as well as men. Our foreign born population, from habits and training, have wrong views, and for these we must not censure them. The liquor seller is amenable only to law, but for the rest, unless it touches either their love of gain or of pleasure, they are readily influenced. Give them leaflets in their own language, explaining the nature and value of our Sabbath and they will listen. Show them the results of the Sunday beer gardens and we may hope to win their help in closing them. Many of them get all their ideas of American institutions, and especially of the Sabbath, from the infidel papers at the beer saloons. "'The Sunday liquor traffic can often be effectu ally restrained by invoking the aid of law. Aside from this, it will be met in two ways. First, by reaching the entire traffic of seven days, which, as facts have shown, cannot be regulated and must be annihilated; and second, by creating a purer and stronger sentiment against all violations of the

The W. C. T. U. of Pennsylvania have taken hold of the work in that State, and have issued a circular in which the relation of that body to the work of Sabbath reform aside from its relation to temperance, are set forth as follows:

It is sentially and designedly a ceremonial institution of dependent on the power of the Word of God and the influence of the Holy Spirit. Our work among railroad men is hin dered and thwarted by the constant running of trains on the Sabbath. The railroads excuse and justify themselves by appealing to the demand of the government for the transportation of the mails on that day. The government which violates the Sabbath through its mail service, cannot consistently, and will not zealously, exert its influence in any other way to uphold the Sabbath. The example and spirit of the national government, in this respect, will have their influence on legislation and the enforcepased upon the universal moral law written in the ment of laws in all the States. METHODS OF WORK. "Other lines of effort will occur to thoughtful workers, and will be taught by experience. Most of those here mentioned are included by Mrs. J. C. Bateman, Painesville, Ohio, our National Superintendent, in her excellent 'Leaflet No. 2,' which I earnestly recommend local Unions to obtain and circulate. The following may be helpful:

"1. In order to develop and strengthen public sentiment, let each local Union hold occasional pubic meetings—at least once a year—in behalf of the

For an array of facts displaying the present condition of the Sabbath ques tion in all lands, the work by the Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, D. D., entitled 'The Sabbath for Man,' will be found invaluable.

"7. Endeavor to secure the better enforcement of Sabbath laws—especially the laws prohibiting the sale of liquor on the Sabbath. If there is an active Law and Order League' in your vicinity, lend it your zealous co-operation.

Ex-Governor Stanford, the California millionaire whose only son died in Paris about one year ago, proposes to establish educational institutions at Palo Alto as a monument to the memory of his son. It is proposed that the memorial university shall not only afford opportunities for learning to the youth of that State, but that it shall be open to students from all parts of the Union. In addition to the university colleges for young ton, William J. Walker, and Samuel A. attached to the college departments. Mr. Stanford will also endeavor to carry out the known wish of his son to found an institution almost similar to the Cooper Institute of New York. It will be used for the advancement of science and art, with evening classes for mechanics and youths. There will be a school of design, a polytechnic school, galleries of art and collections of models and inventions.

The income of Girard College for 1884 was $950,000. Its real estate alone is valued at $7.346,000, apart from that occupied by the college buildings. The collieries of the college produced 1,400,000 tons last year.

MINISTERS' SONS AND THE MINISTRY.

THE Central Baptist justly remarks No Christian ought to countenance the making of drunkards, least of all ought he to have any part in this horrible iniquity. Many of the judges of our county courts are Christians, and no dramshop license can be obtained without their action. Nor are they required to aid. In this membership five vacan cies were to be filled, to the second of which Prof. Wm. A. Rogers, of Cambridge, Mass., was appointed, "in recognition of his astronomical work." We congratulate Brother Rogers on such recognition at the hands of so distinguished a body of scientists.

In response to our suggestions, following those of Bro. C. A. Burdick, on the symponium plan of presenting certain doctrinal and practical subjects, we have received an article from a brother, on the question, "Is it right in any case to baptize a candidate who does not offer himself to the church for membership?' We should be glad to receive from at least three other persons, their views on the same subject, stated concisely, with direct and simple arguments for the same. These three or four articles, each independent of the others, would, without doubt, present the different sides of this subject to the best possible advantage to those interested in reading them. Shall we have them? If any are disposed to write, please inform us soon, that we may know whether or not to hold the article already received.

MINISTERS are men like other men, and sometimes they need the kindly counsels of true friends as much as other men. They often receive quite another kind of treatment. Criticise him freely; he needs it. But kindly criticize him before his face; but take care how you criticise him before your children. LARGEST DOLLAR paper. It is the largest "dollar weekly" in the United States. Its eight broad, long pages present each week a mass of choicely selected matter containing much to suit each of the varying tastes of the family circle. First and foremost, it gives ALL THE NEWS, complete as to details yet concise in form. Its MARKET REPORTS are unsurpassed for completeness and trustworthiness. Special attention is given to agricultural and home matters. Every issue contains sev-ERAL COMPLETED STORIES and a regular installment of an original story by some well-known English or American author, exclusively secured for THE CHICAGO WEEKLY NEWS. It is an independent paper. It recognizes the utility of political parties as means for the accomplishment of proper ends, but it declines to regard any mere party as a fit subject for unquestioning adoration. It is not an organ, and therefore escapes the temptation of condoning the questionable under the pressure of partisan allegiance. It is unbiased in its presentation of all political news. It solicits the patronage of intelligent, thoughtful, honest people, who love country more than party. In all departments it aims to present an enterprising, impartial and entertaining family newspaper of the very highest grade. Its size and character considered, it is now, more than ever before, the cheapest weekly in the United States.

TWO VISIONS.

Where close the curving mountains drew, To clasp the stream in their embrace. With every outline, curve, and hue Reflected in its placid face,

The plowman stopped his team to watch The train, as swift it thundered by: Some distant glimpse of life to catch, He strains his eager wistful eye.

The morning freshness lies on him, Just wakened from his balmy dreams: The travelers, begrimmed and dim, Think longingly of mountain stream.

Oh, for the joyous mountain air, The fresh, delightful Autumn day Among the hills! The plowman there Must have perpetual holiday!

And he, as all day long he guides His steady plow with patient hand, Thinks of the flying train which glides Into some new, enchanted land,

Where, day by day, no plodding round Wearies the frame and dulls the mind, Where life thrills keen to sight and sound, With plows and furrows left behind.

Even so, to each, the untrod ways Of life are touched by fancy's glow, That ever sheds its brightest rays Upon the path we do not know! -The Century.

"BUT TO MINISTER."

It is a very common feeling that obligation is a burden. We say, How long will these cares press? When will these cares cease? When will it ever be that I shall have my time to myself? We do our duty as something which must be done. We listen to the calls of charity, hoping each one will be the last. "My cares never cease; my toils never end; my work is never done," you say. Then you are a happy man if you are a true man. We are lifted by the burden we carry; we are refined by the cares we encounter. The heaviest life is that which has not a burden to lift. The most wearisome life is that which has not a care to trouble it. The most tired spirit is that which has not a toil to occupy it. The spirit which gives out the most will increase the most.

We love to be ministered unto; we love to be served; we love to be honored. But the blessing is in the ministering; the honor is the service. It is not that the blessing will come when the ministering is done, or the honor be conferred when the service is over. But ministering is itself blessed; service is itself the foundation of honor. The largest life is in the line of the largest service. Obligation is our natural element; duty is our native air. What we do strengthens us more than what is done for us. What we give enriches us more than what we receive. What we do for men, and not what we receive from them, will determine our place in the kingdom of God.—The Advance.

THE PRINCE OF WALES AS A SPEECH-MAKER

There are a very few men in England who can make as good a speech as the Prince of Wales. His voice is singularly far-reaching, clear, pleasant, and his delivery is simple and dignified. But it must not be supposed that the ease and fluency which now characterize his public discourses were attained without trouble, or that the Prince is one of the "mob of gentlemen who speak at ease," and have very little to say worth listening to. At first, when he had to address an audience—and it fell to his lot to begin speech-making whilst he was very young indeed—he spoke with some hesitation, and he gave his audience the idea of one who would be very glad when he could sit down; but by persistent practice, stimulated by The Royal Law contended for. By Edward the certainty that he must look forward to Stennet. First printed in London, in 1658. 64 constant calls upon him, and animated by a high sense of duty, the Prince overcame the difficulties which beset most young orators, aggravated in his case by the consciousness that every word he uttered would be eagerly weighed and recorded. He has acquired a command of language and a felicity of expression which commend his matter to the most critical, whilst it is at the same time judicious in substance and much to the point. No one can make a better case for a charitable institution than the Prince, and his appeals to the pockets of his hearers when he is presiding at a dinner to promote the work of some beneficent association, or to further some useful and meritorious enterprise, are so successful that it is considered the fortune of an evening, from a financial point of view, is secured when the Prince of Wales has consented to take the chair. EFFECT OF COFFEE ON THE COMPOSITION OF THE BLOOD AND ON NUTRITION .- BY Couty, Guimares and Niobey (Cowpt. rend 99_) The authors have examined Guimares' researches on the physiological action of coffee, using the methods adopted by Couty & D' Arsouval in their investigations on mate(Cowpt, rend. 94). They find that coffee diminishes considerably the proportion of gases in the blood, but does not affect the proportion of carbohydrates consumed. In other words, it diminishes the activity of the simple combustions which produce carbonic anhydride. On the other hand, coffee increases very considerably the amount of urea in the blood, and stimulates those complex animal processes which use up nitrogenous substances. It increases the formation and excretion of urea, and also the assimilation of nitrogenous foods, such as beef. The tension of the blood, the biliary and salivary secretions, and the temperature, are slightly increased, and the movements of the heart and respiratory organs become somewhat more frequent. (In many instances palpitation of the heart is due entirely to the use of coffee). It follows that coffee is a complex aliment, which acts mainly by indirectly modifying the phenomena of nutrition and the general functions. It renders the organism capable of consuming and destroying larger quantities of nitrogenous substances, and may consequently be regarded as an indirect source of available energy.

HEART BEATS.-Dr. N. B. Richardson, of London, says he was recently able to convey a considerable amount of conviction to an ntelligent scholar by a simple experiment. The scholar was singing the praise of the "ruddy bumper," and saying he could get through the day without it, when Dr. Richardson said to him: "Will you be good enough to feel my pulse as I stand here?' He did so. I said 'Count it carefully; what does it say?' 'Your pulse says 74.' I then sat down in a chair, and asked him to count it again. He did so, and said, 'Your pulse has gone down to 70.' I then lay down on the lounge, and said, 'Will you take it again?' He replied: 'Why, it is only 64; what an extraordinary thing!' I then said: 'When you lie down at night, that is the way nature gives your heart rest. You know nothing about it, but that beating organ is resting to that extent, and if you reckon it up it is a great deal of rest, because in lying down the heart is doing ten strokes less a minute. Multiply that by sixty, and it is six hundred; multiply it by eight hours, and within a fraction it is five thousand strokes different; and as the heart is throwing six ounces of blood at every stroke, it makes a difference of thirty thousand ounces of lifting during the night. When I lie down at night with. ont any alcohol, that is the rest my heart DAIRY FARM gets. But when you take your wine or grog you do not allow that rest, for the influence of alcohol is to increase the number of strokes, and instead of getting this rest, you put on something like fifteen thousand extra strokes, and the result is, you rise up very seedy and unfit for the next day's work till you have taken a little more of the 'ruddy bumper,' which you say is the soul of man below." -Gaillard's Journal.

CHEMISTRY AS A PROFESSION.—Chemists. as a rule, receive one thousand to twelve hundred dollars a year. This seems small when we consider to what expense a young man has been put to obtain the necessary education. Sometimes, however, in a manufacturing house where he has made himself particularly useful, a chemist may receive eighteen hundred or two thousand dollars, and as superintendent of works he might get five thousand or ten thousand dollars; but such cases are very exceptional. One reason why salaries are smaller in our large cities is said to be found in the number of competent chemists who have come from Germany, and who are willing to work for lower wages than their American brethren demand.

When a chemist has, after years of study and long practice, thoroughly qualified himself in his profession, he can give what is called "an expert opinion." This, as Sam Weller might say, "is an opinion as is much more val'ble than an opinion as is not expert." In a lawsuit, for example, chemists would be employed by both sides, and an expert would receive from fifty dollars a day to twenty-five dollars an hour. If an expert examined a mine, made a report on the information, and gave his views on the likelihood of its paying the people who intended to purchase it, he would be paid perhaps five or six hundred dollars and all expenses. But, remember, there are very few "experts," and that those who enjoy that reputation have paid the price of long continued study, of hard and enthusiastic labor, for the reputation they have made—George J. Manson, in St. Nicholas for April.

OUTLINE.

I. How to be kept by the peace of God. v. 4-7 II. How to have the God of peace with us. v. 8, 9 III. Paul cared for. v. 10.

IV. Paul's contentment. v. 11 12. V. The ground of his contenument. v. 13.

INTRODUCTION.

The church at Philippi was composed largely of poor people, dependent on their daily labor for sus te ance. They were also affected by internal dis These circumstances served to make them unhappy and discontented. No man, by his circumstances and personal example, was better pre pared than Paul, to commend the virtue of content ment to hese tried Christians in Philippi; for he had been screly tried in every way that was possible and was now a prisoner in chains, as he had been for years, and liable at any time to be put to death for some slight offense.

EXPLANATORY NOTES.

V. 4. R joice in the Lord always. When one can feel the real joy of salvation in his soul, and enter into full fellowship with the divine Saviour, he can and will "rejoice always, and "in everything give thank." Paul had used this exhortation once be fore in this epistle, hence he says "again." Having recounted some of the peculiar trials, he repeats this exhortation. See Rom. 12: 12, Phil. 3: 1, 1 Thess. 5: 16, 1 Peter 4: 13.

V. 5. Let your moderation be known unto all men The word moderation scarcely expresses the idea of the original. Some scholars translate it "forbear ance." It seems to mean self control, mildness. There is a kind of mental intoxication to which many people are addicted; temporary bursts of feel ing run away with their judgment and for the hour, ignore the very facts of experience. It is thus impossible to estimate its influence in the past 70 discontented, and filled with doubts and fears, in stead of the joy of salvation, and a calm, restful spirit. The Lord is near. There is something very significant in this statement. The Lord is not a stranger, either to the trials or the weaknesses of his disciples, but is near at hand to help. See Heb. 10: 25, James 5: 8, 9, 1 Peter 4: 7.

V. 6. In nothing be anxious. Be careful for nothing. "Take no thought." Matt. 6: 25, 34. This means, do not be burdened and distracted by the made known to God. We are not limited to some feeble source for help. We may bring all our requests to God the Father Almighty, with the assurance that "his mercy endureth forever." Our sup plication should be made freely and with thanks giving. See Psa. 55: 22, Prov. 16: 3, Matt. 6: 25, Luke 12: 22, 1 Peter 5: 7.

V. 7. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding. This peace results from the conditions mentioned above. When the poor, struggling soul can fully realize the infinite ability and love of the Father, and can commit to him all the cares and burdens that come, then that profound peace and rest comes to sustain the heart and mind in joy and hope.

V. 8. Finally, whatsoever things are true, honora-Mo, just, pure, lovely, etc. The objects of thought and meditation have very much to do with the de velopment and quality of character. A young man of very unfavorable surroundings, or of uncultured or even ignoble parentage and companionship may develop a noble, pure, and inspiring character by Geo. T. Canfield, Alfred Centre, keeping the meditations of the heart right. As a anal admonition to the brethren at Philippi, nothing could be more important in a practical point of view. If they would constantly study the true and honest, the just and pure, that which is lovely and of good report, it would lift them above the sordid and selfish, the degrading and destroying tendencies

V. 9. The things which ye both learned, received. heard, and saw, in me, do. At first they learned of him, then they received or followed his teachings; Morgan R. Smalley, they heard his teachings and observed his examples. Mrs. G. B. Davis, Now he exhorts them to do the same things. See Philippians 3: 17. And the God of peace shall be with you. Paul can give this strong assurance because his own experience has verified it. God will give peace and rest to those who implicitly trust

V. 10. But I rejoiced in the Lord greatly, that now at lingth. Paul is very grateful for the tokens of their kind remembrance of his needs. It had been a long time since he had heard from them directly; now they had sent a messenger all that long journey to Rome with gifts to minister to his necessities. He is careful to acknowledge that they had cared for him all the 'ime, but had lacked opportunity.

V. 11. Not that I speak in respect of want. His rejoici g was not so much on account of relief from physical discomforts, but on account of the sympa thy and love expressed by their gifts. See 1 Tim.

V 12. I know how to be abased, and I know how to abound. That is, Paul has learned how to suffer abasement, and at the same time to abound in peace. contentment, and joy. See 1 Cor. 4: 11, 2 Cor. 6: 10; 11: 27 I have learned the secret both to be filled Mrs. H. S. Rogers, Oxford, and to be hungry. He was now well advanced in years, had an extensive experience of severe labors, hardships, and privations, and still he had learned how to be happy through all these things.

V. 13. I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me. He would not be thought to boast in his own strength, but is careful to acknowledge Christ as the source of his strength, joy, peace, and conteniment. Christ is the exhaustless source of every spiritual help that we need in this and the future life. See John 15: 5, 2 Cor. 12: 9.

WIDE AWAKE for May gives a charming home life frontispiece by St. John Harper, "The Baby 1.) the Library," illu-trating a witty poem by Edward P. Anderson. "Baby" is also celebrated in another poem, "Wasis, the Conqueror," with fourfull page drawings by Garrett; and in yet another, by "M. E. B." "What do we call the Baby;" this also has a beautiful illustration. Stories for girls, and stories for boys abound, all healthful in character and in struc'ive in matter. The Chautauqua Young Folks Reading Union continues to be a valuable feature of the magazine. D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, M: 88.

THE MAY CESTURY.—For special reasons, in the May Century, more space than usual is devoted to the War series, and sixteen pages are added to the regular number, 160, in order that other subjects of public importance should not be slighted. Of superior interest is General Adam Badeau's anecdotal paper on "General Grant" aa a soldier. General Badeau's article covers the whole period of General at Appomattox, concluding with an interesting an alysis of General Grants's soldierly characteristics. past month or more, will make this feature of this deservedly po ular monthly a very interesting one. St. Nicholas for May is rich in its serials, one of th, best of which is "Driven back to Eden," a story of rural life. This is not speaking disparagingly of the other contributions to the number. The Century Cox pany deserve the thanks of the country, as they receive its liberal patronage, for the volume of health ful literature they furnish monthly to the young of scriber, one of the executors of the will of the said our land in this magazine.

HARPER'S MONTHLY for May closes volume 70 of that very able magazine. What a library of science, history, art and literature those seventy volumes make! The history of the publication would itself make it most readable. It is not a slight compliment to the Messrs. Harper & Bros., that the magazine is still as fresh and vigorous as though it were only just entering upon a brilliant career.
